Metro Graffiti Abatement kits are available to small businesses, neighborhood associations, and individuals, free of charge. Contact Metro at 503-823-4000 or by email at graffiti@portlandoregon.gov to learn more.

On a chilly April morning, a handful of determined volunteers from the Multnomah Neighborhood Association braved the cold, wind, rain, and sleet to clean up over two dozen graffiti tags in the Multnomah neighborhood.

The cleanup route ran along Barbur Blvd from SW 22nd to SW 35th, then along Multnomah Blvd, through Multnomah Village, and finally in and around Gabriel Park.

Event co-organizers Julie Leet and Patrick Brunett made sure to photo-document each "tag" along the route beforehand.

On the day of the event, teams received a map of the neighborhood showing where to find each targeted tag, plus color photographs to help identify them. (more on next page...)

The volunteers, including Neighborhood Association Chair Moses Ross, Lisa Abbott, Suzanne Kruse, and Bob Leet, gathered at the Multnomah Arts Center, where they received training on how to approach tags on hard, painted surfaces, telephone poles, and concrete. Each type of tag requires a slightly different technique.

Team members were provided with well-stocked "Clean It Up" kits, obtained from Metro through its graffiti abatement program.

"These are great kits," explained Julie Leet. Each kit contains spray cleaning solution, a plastic bucket and scraper, gloves, safety glasses and a microfiber cloth.

The kits are available to small businesses, neighborhood associations, and individuals, free of charge from Metro. Contact Metro at 503-823-4000 or by email at graffiti@portlandoregon.gov to learn more.

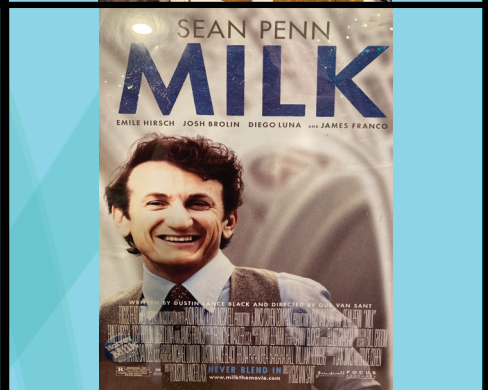

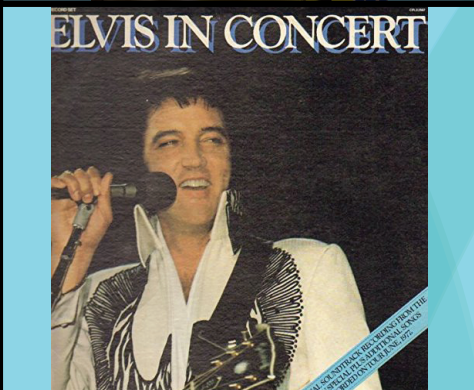

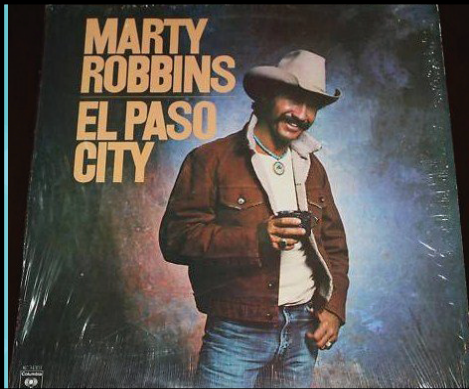

"This was a very successful endeavor," explained Patrick Brunett, a member of the Multnomah Neighborhood Association's Public Safety Committee.

"All of the tags were removed. But just as important, it brought together neighbors around an important common cause. We believe graffiti should be removed as soon as it appears, to discourage more tagging and vandalism, and to maintain the livability of our neighborhoods. We look forward to doing it again."
